

EAT AND DRINK

Hamantaschen for Purim: Where to find the dessert in NYC

By Meredith Deliso meredith.deliso@amny.com March 9, 2017

Get your fruit-filled cookie fix.

0

COMMENTS

If you don't have a hamantaschen hookup, you're in luck.

Bakeries are doling out the Purim specialty just in time for the holiday. The triangular cookie, filled traditionally with ingredients like poppy seed, apricot and chocolate, is shaped to represent the three-cornered hat worn by the villain Haman in the Book of Esther.

Most bakeries offer hamantaschen seasonally, so get them before they're gone. Here's where to find them.

All Eli Zabar retail locations (including four Eli's Essentials, Eli's Market on the Upper East Side and Eli's Bread & Pastry at Grand Central Market) are selling large hahenntaschen in prune, poppy seed, apricot and raspberry flavors, with kosher options also available. $5.95/each, available seasonally; various locations, elizabar.com