

Passover 2017: Where To Go in NYC

Delicious ways to celebrate Passover

by Stefanie Tudor | @stefanietuder | Apr 7, 2017, 1:24pm EDT

TWEET SHARE PIN

Noglu's Passover macaroons | Noglu

Passover can be a bummer for those who love food. It's an eight-day furlough — this year from Monday, April 10 at sundown through Tuesday, April 18 at sundown — from flour, rice, corn, most grains, and legumes. But just because you have to restrict your eating doesn't mean you can't eat well.

A lot of Passover specials are flooding the zone this holiday, but here's what's worth paying attention to. These 11 restaurants are upping the ante in Passover-friendly ways around NYC. Note: These places are not kosher.

Eli's Table, E.A.T., Eli's Essentials

What: E.A.T. always has matzo brei on its menu, but Eli Zabar is adding the eggy dish to his other two restaurants — Eli's Table and Eli's Essentials — during the holiday.

Details: Available during the holiday. 1413 Third Ave., NYC

Noglu

What: It's a natural extension for this Upper East Side gluten-free bakery to add Passover items, and the menu this year includes rugelach made with chickpea flour, housemade matzo, macaroons, and more.

Details: Available during the holiday. 1266 Madison Ave., NYC